

I have deep concerns about what the consolidation of our airwaves is doing to our democracy in this country. Those who own the airwaves own access to the hearts and minds of the American public and can manipulate it to their own benefit, to the detriment of the public good. A healthy democracy depends on the free expression of diverse opinions; broad ownership of the means of broadcasting these opinions is essential to a healthy public discourse.